

Nexus Meets Focus Facilitation

0:06

I'm Jeremy Warhurst, director of Focus Facilitation. My background is finance accounting, information systems, data, knowledge engineering and how all of those things can help organisations solve problems. At Focus Facilitation what we do is we create concepts and models, and techniques and tools to help bring the best practices of knowledge working, information working, data working to bear on challenges and blockages that organisations have, to try and help them resolve things that are particularly large or complex or important to them.

We're looking to develop our business by talking to lots of people that are typically directors or founders who have a challenge or the need to make a breakthrough with something related to their organization that can be addressed using knowledge engineering, information engineering and data engineering.

Actually we're looking to collaborate with any organization that's experiencing some kind of blockage that can be helped with knowledge working, information working and data working practices but specifically with startups and growth companies. And that's why it's great to be at Nexus because there's a lot of those guys around. We've already made a lot of strides with our tools and techniques as a result of talking to Nexus members and we just want to do a lot more of that.
